The 6th FASIC conference will bring together over 60 scholars from a range of academics to share knowledge and mutual understanding by highlighting recent research on Australia and to promote Australian Studies as an international, lively, and engaging field of inquiry. The Conference is an exciting place for the many participant academics, researchers, post-graduate and other students to engage in the debates.

Global Connections: Space, Place and Shared Destiny will build upon previous conferences' narrations of connectivity between Australia and China, whilst aiming to address new and uncharted areas of timely discussion. This year's host city, Chengdu, has a unique geographical and anthropological landscape, and host university, Sichuan Normal University, is renowned for its contribution to minority studies and cultural preservation. This offers an unprecedented opportunity for the 6th FASIC conference to embark on an in-depth discussion, including but not limited to: mobility; geography; environmental stability; international relations; social and economic studies; minority and gender studies; as well as real and imagined "spaces" between East and West in 2018. The notion of "shared destiny" will address global challenges from philosophical, cultural, scientific and innovative viewpoints, aiming to construct knowledge pathways to benefit local and global communities.

The annual FASIC Conference is convened by Professor Gregory McCarthy, BHP Chair of Australian Studies at Peking University, and hosted by the Australian Studies Centre, Sichuan Normal University.

Professor McCarthy says, "This sixth FASIC Conference is an overwhelming opportunity for students, academics and researchers to meet and exchange perspectives with leading Australian Studies practitioners. The forum coincides with the 40th anniversary of the Australia China Council, which has been a long-time supporter of Australian Studies in China. This is a fitting time to explore the future of Australian studies particularly in relation to Asia."

Professor Badeng Nima, Dean of the Faculty of Education and Director of the Australian Studies Centre at Sichuan Normal University says, "In the spirit of knowledge sharing and mutual understanding, it is anticipated that this conference will foster people-to-people relations between Australia and China, whilst highlighting the shared nature of global communities and ecosystems."

About Professor Gregory McCarthy BHP Chair of Australian Studies at Peking University

The annual FASIC conference in China is convened and designed by Professor Gregory McCarthy, BHP Chair of Australian Studies at Peking University. The conference rotates on an annual basis and addresses a different theme with new speakers each year. Professor McCarthy holds a Personal Chair of Australian Politics at the University of Western Australia. His main research interests and extensive publications are on Australian politics and political culture. His research focuses on transitional change within and between nations, exploring how material, cultural and political forces create instability and how nations, institutions and people adapt to uncertainty. His seminal book Things Fall Apart: A History of the State Bank of South Australia, analysed the dynamic relations between global financial change and its dramatic effect on public banking in Australia. Recently, Professor McCarthy has written on the internationalisation of Australian higher education effected by Chinese students studying in Australia, and the steady growth of Australian students studying in China. He has also explored the political implications of the conversion of Australian higher education from an elite to a mass education system. In addition, he has investigated the international relationship between Australia and China as read through the policies of contemporary Australian governments.
